Overview

Mackay Peltzer is an associate at Anderson & Kreiger who works on environmental, land use, public law, and litigation matters. Her background in both environmental law and business gives her a practical perspective on matters involving complex legal, regulatory, and operational issues.

During law school, Mackay worked in the Natural Resources Section of the California Attorney General's Office, conducting legal research and analysis in active environmental matters. Before law school, she spent four years at Notch Partners, where she worked with private equity clients and senior executives on potential investments and acquisitions across industries including energy, chemicals, manufacturing, and infrastructure.

Mackay first joined Anderson & Kreiger as a summer associate.
